Current Event: India opens up to foreign retail

India's been the views of many economists in the last couple of decades, quickly globalizing and increasing GDP rapidly as well as the standard of living. Recently, the government proposed a plan that would allow large multinational companies to take 51% of stakes in local companies. However, this would drive thousands of small companies out of business and many states have seen large-scale protests, asking the government to repeal the bill. Though it would help the economy grow, the people affected certainly are not happy about the prospect of losing their livelihood.
